PRETTY EXPENSIVE RIDE FOR A STREET CAR PASSENGER

It cost Joe Bell $23.10 to ring up a five cent fare on a street car yesterday afternoon. Bell is a colored celebrity and it seems he was on the 2:30 street car going toward Fourteenth street, when he arose in the car and jerked the bell rope. The bell was in perfect working order and registered. The conductor immediately had the man placed under arrest, special officer Charles Thomas of the street railway services being summoned. A warrant was placed in the hands of Chief Woolsey and Bell was arrested and confined in the lockup. He was given a hearing at five o'clock last evening. He plead not guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct and evidence was submitted to prove the man's guilt.

Bell in defense of his actions claimed he wanted off at Fourteenth street and that there was no conductor on the rear platform. He claimed he wanted to signal to the conductor in order to have the car stop.

This didn't seem to be a satisfactory reason for the action and the squire imposed a fine of $10.00 and costs, amounting in all to $23.10, which the man paid.

Sailor Gets on Toot

Erick Wallin, a sailor, just returned from the Navy, decided to celebrate his return to the good old sod by getting drunk. His joy was short lived as last night at 11:25 as he was going home, he fell through the window of the laundry in the basement of the Speigelberg block. He immediately paid for the window. This morning when he was given a hearing and told that his fine would be $1.00 and costs or $3.00, he remarked that it was poor lodging for $3.00 a night. He also said "Believe me I will get out of this town right away for you are not allowed to turn around in it." Albert Kronoander, his companion of the day and night's revelry, paid a fine of $1 and costs or $3.00.

Called His Wife Down

A choice bit of gossip has been going the rounds for the past week. The principal parties connected with the affair are well known, which makes the story all the more sensational. A husband and wife are mixed up in the scandal, and what makes it doubly startling is the fact that each of them has always had the entire respect of the community.

As a matter of fact the bomb exploded at the home of this couple at the very moment at which there arrived at their house a party of twenty five or thirty of our best people who had gone there to surprise the couple on their wedding anniversary.

Neither of the principals expected company. The astonishment of the visitors may be imagined when they heard the husband call his wife down. He made no bones of it. It was done openly and without a hint of apology to the guests. The shocking part of it is the fact that everyone, even the closest friends of the couple, had no idea but that their home life was ideal. Nevertheless we have the best of authority for the story—when the company arrived they were met at the door by the astonished husband. As soon as the first greetings were over he said, "My wife is up stairs, I will call her down." And he did.

Governor Sees Hope In Restoration of Republican Policies

Gov. Martin G. Brumbaugh on speaking of the national outlook, hopes to restore prosperity through the policies of the Republican party at the next presidential election. "Give the people the legislaion they want" is his key to the situation. According to the Governor there will be little left of the bull moose faction when the time for the presidential campaign rolls round.

The state of Pennsylvania is more concerned in the success of the Republican party at the presidential election two years hence than any other commonwealth in the United States, said the Governor.

Pennsylvania is unquestionably the stronghold of the protective tariff. The great range of active industries in the state of Pennsylvania are most affected by the tariff, and it is impossible for an immense industrial community such as the commonwealth of Pennsylvania to prosper under a free trade tariff. Pennsylvania cannot go ahead with its powerful and far-reaching industrial activity under the operation of a free trade tariff schedule. Her industries pay a wage too high to enable her to compete under a free trade tariff. Nor can any other state, for that matter.

The Democratic tariff is an entirely wrong conception so far as it concerns the revenue problem. The expenses of the national government are constantly increasing, and the only method by which revenues under the present tariff schedule can be made to meet the demands of the government is by a sliding scale. In other words the tariff must be changed to permit the government to meet expenses, which are always increasing. The Democratic theory of a tariff for the purposes of revenue only is essentially a failure.

MONESSEN ICE COMPANY SELLS OUT BUSINESS

Harry Fellenbaum, proprietor of the Monessen Ice company, has disposed of his interests to C. M. Hilliard of Butler and R. H. McDowell of Grove City, and the new firm has taken charge.

Messrs. Hilliard and McDowell are experienced ice dealers, having been in the business for the past thirteen years. The deal includes ice trucks and equipment, ice contract and good will, and the firm will enlarge the present facilities, placing several additional teams in service. They have contracted for 70 tons of crystal ice daily and will give the promptest service to all parts of the town. Permanent offices will be established in the central part of town in the near future. Mr. Fellenbaum expects to go into the automobile business and will later erect a garage and handle gasoline and automobiles and supplies.

PROPERTY OWNERS ALONG HIGHWAY GET VERY LIGHT DAMAGES

Samuel M. Ankney, the Monessen attorney, was one of the viewers to appraise damages along the new Greensburg-Mt.Pleasant road which was improved by the county, and along which many of the abutting property owners claimed damages. Mr. Ankney in addresing the interested parties in the grand jury room stated that while in many cases there might be slight damages to trees, fences, etc., that the benefits to be derived from an improved road through a farming community far exceeded the damages.

Only slight damages were awarded in a very few of the cases. Thus it can be seen that viewers appointed by the court to award damages along improved highways will not be very liberal in soaking the county when such highways are built at the cost of the taxpayers of the county.

It would be unwise for certain sections to get damages for land taken and trees and fences destroyed and at the same time be benfitted by a good road when other sections are also asking for improved roads. Should damages be awarded in every case where there is an apparent reason, the road building business would soon be at an end People are prone to look upon the damage side alone and forget all about the benefits to be derived from a good road.

Boy Scouts to Organize

Chairman Alfred Tanzer of the board of trade has called a meeting in the council chamber this evening for the purpose of organizing the boy scouts. There was a meeting last week, but it was so poorly attended that no organization was formed. Fifteen men were present and this was not considered a sufficient number. Mr. Tanzer and others are of the opinion that more people should be interested in the boys of Monessen. Tonight a full organization will be formed, a scout master elected and a full corps of officers. The scout work will be started at once and pushed along vigorously. A good attendance is hoped for.

Convention

The tenth annual convention of the Scottdale District No. 7 of the Westmoreland County Sunday school association will be held in the St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran church, Scottdale, April 16. The conference will begin at 2 o'clock and will be closed with an evening session beginning at 7 o'clock.

Twenty five Sunday schools will participate in the coming convention including the schools of Scottdale and East Huntingdon township.

Mrs. G. H. Thomas, of Monessen, county superintendent of the elementary department on elementary work in the Bible schools of Westmoreland county, will be one of the speakers of the afternoon. Rev. W. C. Betts, county missionary superintendent, will deliver an address on "Missions in the Bible School" at 3 o'clock. A supper will be served at 6 o'clock and the workers' conference will follow.

The address of the evening will be made by Rev. L. C. Denise, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of New Kensington, who has selected for his address, "The Lost and Found Department." Attorney John C. Sisley, of Greensburg, president of the county association, will make an address on "The Adult Department."

Scottdale will entertain the County Sunday School convention which convenes on September 23 and 24.

Injuries Result in Death

Henry Sheetz, 27 years of age, of Fayette City, died yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the Monessen-Charleroi hospital as a result of injuries caused by being thrown under a freight train at his home town.

Rumor has it that Sheetz had been drinking and that he tried to board an east bound freight, when he was thrown under the wheels of the train and one leg ground off. He was picked up by a train crew and dispatched to the hospital, but he died from shock a few minutes after being received at the institution. He leaves a wife and two small children. The funeral will take place tomorrow from his home in Fayette City.

Services Well Attended

Evangelistic services are well under way at the First Christian church on Sixth street. The sermon charts are attracting much attention and causing no little comment. Some points on one of the charts were said to be wrong, but they were sustained by scripture, just as they appeared on the chart. Come and see for yourself. Bring your Bible for there will be something doing and you will need it The subject tonight will be "The Law of Pardon."

The Utitity of Gold

..Did you ever see a yard stick that was longer on one side than on the other? Think it over a minute. It's not a joke, merely a paradox. The yardstick by which civilized man, so-called, measures all values, is just that sort of lop-sided implement. Gold, according to modern economics, is about as accurate as were the scales the first settlers of Manhattan used in weighing the furs they bought from the Indians. The simple savages early learned that a white man's hand always weighted exactly one pound and his foot two against their furs.

Trouble with gold is that it is at the same time commodity and the measure of commodity value. As a standard its value is arbitrary fixed at the mint. As a commodity its price in terms of other commodities fluctuates whenever a prospector finds a new lode or a chemist discovers a way to save gold from the mill tailings. Like other commodities when the average man buys it is dear, and when he sells it is cheap.

Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale has a plan for the government to vary the amount of gold in the dollar according to the variations in the supply and demand. But Prof. Frederick Soddy of Glasgow university intimates we'll go farther than that. "It can scarcely be doubted," he says, "that one day we shall come to break down and build up elements in the laboratory." That is, some day we shall manufacture gold.

Soddy and Rutherford have done some of that already. They have proven that uranium changes into radium, and have changed radium, through several steps into polonium. They calculated polonium ought to change into lead. Now another chemist, Hofman, has done that, and the next change, according to the scale of atomic weights, should be from lead to gold.

The dream of the ancient alchemists come true! Impossible? That's a word no modern scientific investigator dares to use.

We won't be laying golden paving blocks tomorrow. Indeed, the utility of gold as a paving material may be questioned. Perhaps it will be useful for dram pipes in open plumbing. We don't have to decide that point, but our descendants will have to find a new standard of values.

What will be the new momentary yardstick of higher civilization than ours? A day's labor, maybe. That, at least, would be a standard that couldn't be hoarded.

Start Prosperity

For more than a year the habit of self-denial has been practised by the American people. Whatever may have been wanted either in the home, the farm or the shop, the inclination has been to refrain from purchasing. To save, not to spend has been the rule. The moment has come to reverse the practice. The slogan which will lead to prosperity is Buy It Now! Never was it truer than at this moment that the prosperity of this people is in their own hands. By their own act they can hasten the end of the existing depression and speed the arrival of unexampled prosperity. That end and that arrival are certain to come in any event, but a widespread determination to cast off the fetters which doubt and apprehension have put upon us in the past will hasten the day.

The war, coming fast on the heels of new tariff legislation spread far and wide the seeds of business distrust and individual apprehension of hard times. Thrift, a virtue in its place, was carried to the point at which it became vice. Prudence developed into niggardliness; men ordinarily forehanded became misers; the ancient maxim was amended to read: "Take care of the pennies and lock up the dollars out of use."

The result has been a financial stringency now happily fast disappearing and business depression for which no reasons longer exists. It is time for people again to resume the habits of life and of business which characterized Americans before this depression set in. We do not counsel extravagance, but we insist that niggardliness is no longer either necessary or helpful—not even to the person practicing it. If every reader of this paper, for example, would loosen to the channel of trade $10 in the next two weeks for things they really need, but have, through fear of the future, been trying to do without, they would be better off, business would be appreciably stimulated, and its revival felt by those who contributed to it.

We Knew Her

A girl called the writer of this paper on the phone and said "Hello" and the writer said "Hello," and she said "Do you know who this is talking?" and the writer said "Of course, I recognized your voice the first thing by its charming qualities," and she said "Huh!"

"Have you a story today?" said the writer, and Miss ——— said "What will I get if I give you a good story?" and the writer said "if it's a good one you will get your name printed in the column right along with it," and she said "Huh!"

"Talking," said central, and Miss ——— said "Of course I'm still talking, because I haven't even got to the story, which is about a young man who took me to a picture show, and when he went home with me he stayed so long my mother called him to the head of the stairs and said 'It's nearly 12 o'clock.'"

Then the writer said he couldn't print the story if it had no more point to it than that, and she said that she hadn't come to the point yet, and that one didn't come to the point of the story until one asked the reason the young man stayed so late.

So the writer said "What's the reason the young man stayed so late?"

"I am," said the girl.

SIXTY YEARS AGO PEOPLE WEREFIGHTING

The Allies, Mexico and Prohibition, Subjects of Newspaper Comment Then as Now

The well word saying, "history repeats itself," was never better illustrated than when reading a copy of a newspaper called "Graham's Daily Mail," which fell into our hands the other day. The paper was printed at Philadelphia sixty years ago. One might think a periodical of that date would be a back number in every sense; and it may be surprising to learn that many of its news paragraphs would not appear out of place in a paper of today, while the subjects of its leading articles are just as much in the public mind now as then.

For instance the progress of the European war, in which we read of "The Allies," intrenchments, the prospects of peace, and the intimation that Great Britain is a little too ambitious about "ruling the waves." Other subjects discussed are the situation in Mexico, Prohibition laws, "The Horrors of War," the need of more enlistments in the United States Navy, and "Submarine Explorations;" these last were by means of an improved diving bell.

In the article on prohibition, the editor is confident that such a law will be passed in Pennsylvania within a year. He believes it the best possible means of controlling the liquor traffic, and considers it only a matter of time when it will prevail for the entire country. Doubtless, however, he did not forsee how much time.

The war of course, was the Crimean, in which the Allies, England and France were combined against their present ally, Russia. We see by the market reports that it had the same effect as the present war on the price of grain, only more so. Wheat is quoted at $2.50 to $2 75, flour $11.50 a barel, rye $1.50, corn $1.10, oats 79c. Cotton was selling from six to sixteen cents a pound; sugar at about present prices. But coffee is quoted at ten and eleven cents, and bacon eight to ten, hams ten to twelve and a half a pound.

Another very modern touch appears in the marketing report, where against certain items is "Nothing Doing."

MOTHERS OF THIS COUNTRY have through all ages past and will through all years to come, take care of the ordinary simple ailments incident to every family with their own favorite remedy.

In almost every home in the land Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the recognized standard household remedy for female ills; thousands of American women owe their good health to it. Made from the roots and herbs of the field, it is a simple remedy in which suffering women may place perfect confidence. It contains no narcotics or harmful drugs.

SYNOPSIS.

Reginald Nelson, a young Englishman of high birth, comes to this country to win fame and fortune. On the steamer he meets Albert Townley, a minister, Mrs. Graham and her pretty daughter, Joy.

Contenting himself with a brief visit around New York, Reginald accompanied Albert Townley to Bronson.

* * * * * * *

The day after his arrival in Bronson Albert Townley was walking down the main street, nodding his head continually, like a Chinese mandarin, as his numerous friends greeted him on every side. Suddenly two men stopped in front of him.

"I am glad to see you home again, Mr. Townley, said the older of the two men.

"Mr. Graham, I declare!" responded the minister heartily. "It does me good to see some familiar faces once more."

"Mrs. Graham and Joy have been telling me about their pleasant voyage home on the same boat with you," said the other, who was Mrs. Graham's husband. "Here's a friend," he continued, "whom I wish you to meet. This is the new pastor of the Central church, Dr. Allan Rutledge. I think you two men ought to become good friends."

Albert Townley looked at Mr. Graham's companion with a lively interest. He had often heard of the young minister who had stirred the entire middle west with his apostolic fervor.

Shortly the two ministers bade goodby to Mr. Graham and walked down the street together.

"Tell me something about your work in Wellington," said Mr. Townley.

"There was nothing very wonderful about my ministry in Wellington," replied Allan Rutledge smilingly. "I am surprised to see the interest that the country has taken in my work in that small Iowa town. The facts simply were that the community needed the gospel of Christ, and I was privileged to bring it to them in an effective way."

"But in the reports of your work there which I have read," said Townley, "you revolutionized your church, the college in Wellington and the entire community."

"When I began my ministry in Wellington," responded the other, speaking more earnestly, "both our church and college were dead spiritually. There was a distressing lack of life and power, and I simply proved once more what has been proved ten thousand times that the gospel is the power of God."

Before accepting his recent call to Bronson, Allan Rutledge had been pastor for six years in Wellington, Ia., and, as Mr. Townley said, his ministry there had brought him wide fame.

The Central church of Bronson had finally been able to prevail on the powerful young western minister to accept a call, and he had only arrived in Bronson on the week preceding the return of Albert Townley from his trip abroad.

"You have come here," said Albert Townley, speaking with intense earnestness, "in response to the prayers of many true Christian people. We feel we are in bondage in Bronson, and we need a Moses to deliver us.

"Do not for a moment think that I am trying to make out that Bronson is a specially wicked city," continued Townley quickly, "but I would like you to begin your ministry here knowing that Bronson needs a regeneration far more than Wellington ever needed one. There are a multitude of earnest Christian men and women in our city, but the city itself is now in the control of the powers of evil. It is foolish to deny it. A corrupt ring controls our city politics, and it keeps our best citizens under its thumb. Saloons and gambling places are wide open, and no one pretends that our laws regulating and restraining these evils are enforced.

"I am speaking in strict confidence, remember, just as a local physician would speak to a visiting specialist, but I want to give you an illustration of the condition of things as they really are. You noticed that Mr. Graham greeted me very cordially this afternoon when he introduced us. He and I are good friends, and in many ways I respect him as a good citizen. But he is no Christian and does not pretend to be. His wife and daughter are members of your church, but he is not a member, although, as you know, he is the leading trustee in the organization and really controls the Central church. He is well versed in regard to the inward corruption of Bronson, but he regards it as inevitable and will fight any attempt to better conditions. He is the legal counsel of the corrupt ring, and he uses his splendid legal powers to keep that crowd out of the penitentiary."

CHAPTER II.

Reginald Nelson Gets a Job.

After Townley's unflattering picture of his leading trustee Allan Rutledge looked somewhat blankly at the merciless diagnostician. His companion noticed the expression and continued: "I want you to pardon me for speaking so plainly, but remember it is the business of a physician to know the disease he is called upon to cure. Your church is merely a sample of what every influential church is in Bronson. In my own church the editor of our best daily paper, the Courier, is one of the leading members. His name is Thomas Marchmount. He is my chief trustee, but as a Christian he is a doubting Thomas and looks on the church exactly as Mr. Graham does. He would not be a member today had he not joined as a young lad many years ago. He absolutely refuses to use his immense influence to better our social conditions. His excuse always is, 'As long as men are men you will have these evils in Bronson, and there is no use making trouble over it.'"

"I think I am beginning to understand what you are driving at," said Allan Rutledge quietly. "These men

"How are you, Mr. Nelson?"

think that it is useless to fight against the evils which you claim are eating the heart and life out of our churches and community."

"Exactly," said the other.

As they walked down the main street the crowds kept growing, and soon it was evident that something was happening on the street.

"What's the matter?" asked Allan Rutledge, as they stepped into a doorway in order to escape from the crush.

"I think the strikers have been getting into trouble," answered Mr. Townley. "One of our factories which employs mostly women and girls have been having a strike lately, and the court has issued an injunction against picketing."

Just then a number of policemen came along, each leading a young woman, whom they were evidently seeking to take to the city jail near by. The girls had been arrested for disobeying the injunction of the court, as Mr. Townley had conjectured. Among them was the leader of the strike, a young looking woman, Lena Myers. A big, burly policeman was leading her along by the arm.

"Friends," shouted Lena Myers, "we women are striking because we want to be able to live respectable lives." The crowd became attentive at once, and the girl continued: "Every one looks down on a bad girl, but we girls are compelled to go astray as long as"—

"Shut up!" said the policeman who held her arm, giving her a shake and adding an oath to his peremptory command.

The crowd jeered and shouted at the officers of the law, and its aspect became threatening.

"You see we have many problems in Bronson," said Townley, looking after the crowd which followed in the wake of the policemen.

Allan Rutledge made no answer, but to himself he said, "I can well understand that Socialism will grow in Bronson."

On arriving in Bronson Nelson began to search for a boarding house and found a modest home on a quiet street, where he engaged a room from a middle aged couple. After moving his few belongings to his new home he had a feeling of rest and satisfaction, and his outlook on the future became more rose colored. He found the husband and wife with whom he was to lodge and board agreeable and kindly, and they at once took pains to make the young immigrant feel at home. Their name was Cameron, and Reginald could easily tell that his host was a Scotchman by his accent.

He began the serious work of getting a job. He had not seen Albert Townley since he parted from him after his arrival.

He decided first to visit the law firm of Millman & Graham and present his letter of introduction.

He easily found the office. A stately, important looking man about fifty years of age greeted Reginald cordially when his card was sent in.

"I am Mr Graham," he said heartily, reaching out his hand. "You are Reginald Nelson, I believe. I am glad to meet you. My wife and daughter came over on the same boat with you from Europe."

Reginald had not expected this cordiality and was somewhat confused. "They have been telling me about you," continued the lawyer. "You have come to make your home in Bronson, I understand."

"Yes. I am an immigrant, and I expect to settle in America and spend my life here."

"Good," replied Mr. Graham smilingly. "Our country needs strong, active young fellows like you. How old are you, Mr. Nelson?"

"I was twenty-four on my last birthday."

"What kind of employment do you wish?"

"I would like to get into a newspaper office if possible," answered Reginald. "If that is not possible at first I wish to begin somewhere at the bottom of the ladder."

"Good," again repeated Mr. Graham, looking keenly at the young fellow. "I do not think there is an opening at present in any of our newspaper offices, but the agent of one of our railroad depots spoke to me just yesterday about needing a new clerk. Would you care to begin in a railroad office?"

"It will be all right, certainly."

Just then the door of the office opened, and Joy Graham entered her father's office. At the sight of the immigrant she blushed slightly and paused, but quickly recovering herself she stepped up to him, saying: "How are you, Mr. Nelson? I am glad to see you again."

Mr. Graham had turned to his desk to write a note introducing Reginald to the station agent. Hearing his daughter's voice, he turned around quickly and saw the two young people shake hands with great cordiality.

"What is it, Joy?" he asked abruptly.

The girl dropped Reginald's hand.

"I came in to ask you, papa," she said in a low voice, "if I might call at the jail this morning to see those poor girls who were imprisoned last night."

"Do you mean, Joy, that you want to associate with those female law breakers who have been disturbing the peace of our city? No, no, child; let such people alone."

"But I only wanted to take them a few flowers."

"I could not think of allowing you to give those striking workwomen any encouragement. They have broken the injunction law, and they must pay the penalty."

There was a suspicion of a tear in her eyes as she turned away, but she said bravely: "All right, father. I would not go if you would not like it."

After she had gone, Mr. Graham wrote the note of introduction, but Reginald imagined that he was not as cordial as before.

With his heart still throbbing from his brief interview with Joy Graham and feeling that his note of introduction to the station agent gave him a footing of some sort among his fellow men in Bronson, Reginald walked with light step to the depot and was soon ushered into the presence of the station agent.

"Have you had any experience?" queried the agent.

"I have had quite a good deal of experience in office work in England. If you should need any typewriting done I have had a good deal of that to do."

"Do you know shorthand and typewriting?" asked the agent quickly.

"Yes. I learned that a year or two ago for amusement, never expecting to use it, but I am fairly proficient now."

"You're just the man I want," said the agent, with decision. "I need some one to help me with my correspondence and if you can run a typewriter I want you to begin work at once. Come in at 1 o'clock."

That afternoon Reginald Nelson began his work in the railway freight office. He assisted the agent in caring for his correspondence and also attended to some minor clerical work. There were five other men in the office, the cashier, assistant cashier, the bill clerk, the rate clerk and the car number clerk, as the agent designated them when introducing Reginald.

The conversation among the men turned to political matters and as a national election was approaching the interest in this subject was intense. Every political party seemed to be represented in the small office force. Reginald judged from the talk.

Finally, something brought up the matter of civic affairs, and the discussion among the clerks waxed warm.

"We have a fine lot of guys running this town, haven't we?" said the bill clerk, in a tone of disgust.

"What's the matter with you and our city administration?" responded the cashier, who was a tall, handsome man, with an aristocratic air.

"The arrest of those girls last night was an outrage," said the bill clerk, angrily. "One would think we were living in Turkey instead of free America."

Reginald Nelson stopped his work and listened to the conversation.

"Those girls need not think they can defy our courts and get away with it," answered the cashier haughtily. "They tell me that the whole lot of the strikers are a crowd that is not much credit to Bronson."

"They lie when they attack the character of those girls!" shouted the now thoroughly incensed bill clerk.

"That's right, Bill," interposed the rate clerk, addressing the defender of the striking factory women. "Those girls are all right, and that one that you are buzzing around is a fine looking dame, all right."

The bill clerk blushed and was silent.

"Well," responded the cashier apologetically, "I think that most of them may be all right, but the pack they arrested need to be in jail."

ODD BITS OF NEWS

Logansport, Ind.—Miss Maude Anders has been appointed deputy sheriff of this county.

St. Louis, Mo.—Mrs. Helen Hart, who is past 70 and the mother of five grown children, has enrolled as a pupil in the Yeatman high school.

Seattle, Wash.—Six years ago Mrs. Ellen A. Heim grubstaked Jeremiah Wilson a prospector and sent him to Alaska. Wilson struck it rich and a court ruling has just ordered an Alaska mining corporation to turn over to Mrs. Heim and her 16 year old daughter Marie, their share in Wilson's discoveries. The share is $6,000.00.

Hopestown, Ill.—This city has an All-Prohibition administration and in a further effort to make it the one real "dry" town of the country, interesting ordinances have been adopted. One measure provides that any member of the city council, the mayor, superintendent of the water plant, police officer, city clerk, city treasurer or other city officer who shall have about his premise or who shall, whether in this city or elsewhere, partake of intoxicants, shall be removed from office.

Cascade, Md. — William Brown, father of 17 children of his own, was lonesome and has just adopted two more children, making 19 youngsters to play about his knees.

THE BEST LETTER

You may write a thousand letters to the maiden you adore,
And declare in every letter that you love her more and more,
You may praise her grace and beauty in a thousand glowing lines
And compare her eyes of azure with the brightest star that shines.
If you had the pen of Bryon you would use it every day
In composing written worship to your sweetheart far away;
But the letter far more welcome to an older, gentler breast
Is the letter to your mother from the boy she loves the best.

Youthful blood is fierce and flaming,
and when writing to your love,
You will rave about your passion,
swearing by the stars above;
Vowing by the moon's white splendor that the girlie you adore
Is the one you'll ever cherish as no maid was loved before.
You will pen full many a promise on those pages white and dumb
That you never can live up to in the married years to come.
But a much more precious letter,
bringing more and deeper bliss,
Is the letter to your mother from the boy she cannot kiss.

She will read it very often when the lights are soft and low, Sitting in the same old corner where she held you years ago.
And regardless of its diction or its spelling or its style,
And although its composition would provoke a critic's smile,
In her old and trembling fingers it becomes a work of art.
Stained by tears of joy and sadness
as she hugs it to her heart.
Yes, the letter of all letters, look whereever you may roam,
Is the letter to your mother from her boy away from home.
